

James P. Jones MD

James P. Jones, M.D., Ph.D., is Assistant Professor of Medicine/Nephrology, Systems medical director of CDI, and Director of Medical Informatics and Quality Initiatives at Mount Sinai St. Luke's and Roosevelt Hospitals. He graduated from Stony Brook University and received his Medical Degree from New York Medical College Fifth Pathway program. . As an academic physician, he has been recognized for excellence in medical education and teaching at every level of his training. During his medical residency at St. Luke's Roosevelt Hospital, his peers awarded him the Outstanding House Staff Award for six out of seven years of training. In 2008 he was awarded the president's award of excellence for his work in medical informatics at St. Luke's Roosevelt Hospital. In 2014 he was the recipient of the St. Luke's Roosevelt Hospital Alumni Association distinguished Young Faculty Member of the Year

In 2012, Dr. Jones completed a Healthcare Leadership Advancement Fellowship Program sponsored by the Greater New York Hospital Association followed by completion of the American Hospital Association Healthcare Transformation Fellowship in 2014.

Dr. Jones is certified by the American Board of Internal Medicine in both Nephrology and General Internal Medicine. He is also Board Eligible in Critical Care medicine.